journal of scholarly publishing

A journal for authors, editors, marketers and publishers, the Journal of Scholarly Publishing is the only international quarterly devoted to the writing, publication and use of serious non-fiction. JSP addresses the age-old problems in publishing as well as the new challenges resulting from changes in technology and funding. Some articles suggest ways to get effectively published in books and journals, while others address such topics as editorial and publishing policy, computer applications, electronic publishing, effective marketing and business management. In serving the wide-ranging interests of the international academic publishing community, JSP provides a balanced look at the issues and concerns – from solutions to the everyday problems to commentary on the philosophical questions at large.
